The drive was well managed, the herd being kept to gether and not overdriver, which often causes a herd to break up into small parties. The wind favored us, and the elephants were got to the plateau near the mouth of the funnel-like approach to the gate without very much trouble. Here the men closed in front on all sides, directed by spies in the trees, as the grass was too high for those on foot to see what the elephants were doing. As the the grass was too high for those on foot to see what the elephants were doing. As the herd trooped past my post at the end of one of the palisades, it seemed as if the procession would never end; my veteran gunbearer, Jaffa, whispered 'they were as the insects of the forest.' Tuskers, females and young elephants of all sizes bundled along, those in the rear flually showing a good deal of apprehension as the bunters began deal of apprehension as the hunters began to close in on them. The moment the last had crossed the outermost fire line, the spies sounded their rattles, and as if by magic (I had not spared a few dozen match boxes among the men) a crackling line of flame extended along the hillside, joining the extreme ends of the palisade, and cutting off retreat. Immediately the hitherto comparthe drive was ative silence yelling and blank firing from all sides, and the elephants hurried forward in a crowd, no longer following any leader, but each striving not to be last. They soon crossed the second five line, and at a signal from a horn, barely audible in the din of

The scene now was extraordinary, and Col. and Mrs. Graham Smith, from a platform in a tree near, had an excellent view of it. The space between the converging palisades was tightly packed by a struggling mass of elephants for many yards from the gate. Every vestige of jungle had disappeared, and the men were skirmsbing with blank cartridges and torches of blazing grass up to within twenty vards or less of the elephants, and a shower of sticks and clods was kept up over the palisades by those outside. The roaring of the youngsters of the herd, which were being trampled and squeezed, combined with the noise of rattles, guns, and of the fire con-Will receive Fish daily from the shores of the Potomac, and will supply consumers in quantities to suit, either fresh or salted by experienced subject.

At last the opposition gave way; the Gunesh and others which were stopping the way were borne onward into the stockade by the pressure behind, and the animals in the rear made renewed exertions to get away from the terrible signts and sounds so close behind them. Only one elephant broke back; she careered through the men, who escaped in the most marvelous manner. In her terror she went through the fire lines, a most unusual pro-ceeding for an elephant. She unfortunately killed a man on the surround some two miles from the stockade, after which no
